YOUTH BETWEEN SCREENS AND SOCIETY

A Pastoral Reflection on the Formation of Young Minds in Our Time

Dear Fathers, Brothers and Sisters,

Grace and peace to you in the Lord Jesus Christ!

Every generation faces its own struggles and temptations. But the challenge confronting today's youth is unprecedented in human history. Never before has a generation lived so connected and yet so lonely; so informed and yet so unreflective; so expressive and yet so inwardly fragile. The modern screen whether cinema, mobile phone, social media, or digital entertainment has become the invisible classroom, the silent preacher, the emotional architect, and the cultural dictator of our age.

The young mind today is continuously fed not with wisdom but with stimulation; not with truth but with impressions; not with discernment but with emotional triggers. The screen has become the new authority. It shapes desires, constructs identities, manufactures aspirations, and even determines moral sensibilities and their leadership.

Many young people today do not experience reality directly. They experience it through screens. Life itself is mediated by images, trends, viral emotions, cinematic fantasies, and digital approval. Consequently, many are slowly losing the courage to face the ordinary struggles of life hardship, sacrifice, discipline, patience, rejection, and responsibility.

A dangerous illusion is spreading among our youth: the belief that transformation comes instantly, dramatically, and emotionally. Cinema promises heroic shortcuts. Social media promises recognition without labour. Digital culture glorifies appearance over character, reaction over reflection, popularity over integrity. Thus, a generation is emerging that often seeks escape rather than endurance, sensation rather than substance, visibility rather than virtue. Saint Paul warned us centuries ago, "Do not conform yourselves to this age, but be transformed by the renewal of your mind." (Rom 12:2). Today the crisis is precisely this: minds are not being renewed; they are being programmed.

THE EMOTIONALIZATION OF SOCIETY

One of the gravest dangers of screen culture is the emotionalization of public life. Young people are easily mobilized by emotionally charged issues, dramatic narratives, trending hashtags, cinematic slogans, and collective excitement. But the same energy is often absent when deeper issues affecting their long-term future, social justice, education, environment, language, culture, moral values, and civilizational heritage are at stake. This creates a society that reacts but does not reflect; gathers but does not organize; protests but does not persevere.

A healthy society needs youth who can inquire, analyse, discern, debate, and think critically. Instead, we risk creating a generation driven mainly by emotional impulses and digital trends. The decline of reading culture, philosophical thinking, historical consciousness, and intellectual discipline is deeply alarming. The Book of Proverbs says, "The simple believe everything, but the prudent give thought to their steps." (Pro 14:15). Today prudence is disappearing. Discernment is weakening. Noise is replacing wisdom. When emotions dominate reason, manipulation becomes easy. When trends replace convictions, truth becomes fragile. When entertainment replaces education, civilization itself becomes vulnerable.

A GENERATION AFRAID OF SUFFERING

Our youth today are growing in comfort but often shrinking in resilience. The digital world permits easy escape from pain. But life cannot be lived without struggle.

No civilization was built without sacrifice. No saint emerged without discipline. No leader matured without suffering. Christ Himself declared: "Whoever wants to be my disciple must deny themselves, take up their cross daily, and follow me." (Lk 9:23). The Cross is not fashionable in today's digital culture. Sacrifice is mocked. Commitment is feared. Endurance is avoided. But without learning to endure hardship, young people cannot become responsible citizens, faithful believers, committed spouses, honest leaders, or compassionate servants of society.

BIBLICAL YOUTH WERE NOT PASSIVE SPECTATORS

The Bible presents young people not as passive consumers of entertainment, but as courageous participants in God's plan for humanity. David did not run away from reality; he confronted Goliath when even seasoned warriors trembled: "Let no one lose heart because of this Philistine" (1 Sam 17:32). David teaches us that youth must courageously face the giants threatening society injustice, addiction, corruption, fear, and moral confusion. Joseph resisted temptation, endured betrayal and imprisonment, and eventually saved nations through wisdom and integrity: "You intended to harm me, but God intended it for good” (Gen 50:20). Joseph represents discernment, emotional maturity, and social responsibility. Judith rose with courageous faith when leaders lost confidence: “The Lord will strike him down by the hand of a woman” (Jud 8:33). She symbolizes moral clarity, spiritual courage, and commitment to the community.

Above all, Jesus Christ Himself stands before us as the perfect model of socially sensitive youth. Even at a young age, He was found among the teachers, listening, questioning, and seeking wisdom (Lk 2:46). As He grew, He became deeply attentive to the poor, the suffering, the excluded, and the oppressed. His youth was not shaped by self-interest, but by compassion, prayer, responsibility, and commitment to God’s Kingdom. Biblical youth were never formed by entertainment culture; they were formed by faith, discipline, courage, and service to humanity.

HAVE OUR EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS FAILED?

This crisis compels us to ask painful but necessary questions. What kind of education are we giving our young people? Have our schools and colleges merely prepared them for examinations and employment while neglecting character, social consciousness, civic responsibility, and moral courage? Have we trained them to compete but not to care? To consume but not to contribute? To achieve but not to serve? Modern education often produces technically skilled individuals but socially disconnected persons. It creates professionals without compassion, achievers without ethical grounding, and consumers without cultural roots.

True education is not merely the transmission of information. It is the formation of conscience. Education must produce young men and women who can think deeply, love generously, act courageously, and stand responsibly within society. Pope Francis repeatedly warned against what he calls a “throw away culture” and a “digital isolation” that weakens authentic human relationships. In his Apostolic Exhortation Christus Vivit, he writes: “Young people need to develop their critical thinking in relation to the seductive and invasive offerings of consumer society” (Christus Vivit, 105). Again he says, “The digital world can expose you to the risk of self-absorption, isolation and empty pleasure.” These words are profoundly relevant to our context today.

THE WISDOM OF THE CHURCH

The Fathers of the Church also warned about the corruption of the mind through unhealthy influences. St. Augustine of Hippo observed, “The mind commands the body and is obeyed instantly. The mind commands itself and meets resistance.” This inner resistance must be overcome through discipline and grace. St. John Chrysostom warned that the formation of youth determines the destiny of society, “The neglect of children is one of the greatest sins.” The Church therefore cannot remain silent spectators while young minds are shaped entirely by digital forces, commercial interests, and ideological manipulation.

WHAT MUST THE CHURCH DO?

Our dioceses, parishes, youth movements, schools, and colleges must become centres of integral human formation. The mission of the Church is not only sacramental administration but also the formation of socially responsible citizens rooted in faith, culture, language, and moral values. Hence, we must shape young minds that value truth over trends, service over self-promotion, wisdom over popularity, and sacrifice over comfort. They must help the younger generation remain rooted in faith, Tamil culture, language, and the spiritual richness of our civilization while preparing them to engage responsibly with society.

Parish youth groups cannot remain mere organizers of celebrations and events; they must become centres of leadership, prayer, social awareness, and intellectual formation. Likewise, our Catholic educational institutions must cultivate critical thinking, ethical responsibility, civic consciousness, dialogue, ecological sensitivity, and concern for the common good. Above all, young people must encounter the poor, the suffering, and the marginalized, because without touching the wounds of humanity, faith becomes shallow and education loses its soul.

May our young people become not victims of digital manipulation, but witnesses of truth. May they become not passive consumers of culture, but creators of a just and compassionate society. May they become not followers of trends, but disciples of Christ. Let our families, schools, parishes, youth commissions, and institutions unite together in this sacred mission of rebuilding the moral and intellectual foundations of our youth.

May the Lord guide and strengthen all our young people to become lights for the world and builders of a civilization rooted in truth, justice, compassion, and faith.

With prayers and blessings,

+ Lourdu Anandam
Bishop of Sivagangai.
